trepat cava rosé

When it comes to "bubbly", the most common four types are Champagne (produced only in the Champagne region of France), Prosecco (from Italy), Cava (from Spain), and Sparkling Wine (sort of a catch-all for all the others). Cava most resembles Champagne with its powerful bubbles but the best difference is its affordability. Trepat is the red grape varietal used in the production of this wine, which adds red fruit aromas and flavors while maintaining a light, refreshing taste with a bright and vibrant pink color.

official tasting notes

- Castellroig Brut Rosé Cava (90 point Wine and Spirits)
- 100% Trepat
- look: red cherry color, fine bubbles, 12.5% ABV
- smell: citrus, smoke, and leather
- taste: delicate fruit, light and airy, minerality and salinity
- retail value: $19

merlot/chardonnay rosé

Rosé has gained recent popularity within the United States with trends like "rosé all day" or "yes way, rosé", but rosé is a very traditional style of wine that is obtained by allowing limited exposure of red grape skins to white grape juice during fermentation. This allows for fuller body and mild tannins in a wine that might traditionally be made as a white wine, but a lighter and refreshing perspective on a traditional red wine. This wine by Wolffer Estates is produced in New York.

official tasting notes

- 2019 Wolffer Estate Rosé
- Merlot, Chardonnay, Cabernet Franc, Pinot Grigio, Cabernet Sauvignon
- look: shiny light copper color, 12.8% ABV, medium-bodied
- smell: peach, pear, rose petals
- taste: fruit-forward, soft tannins, mild acidity, strawberry, saline
- retail value: $20

lambrusco

Lambrusco is an Italian wine varietal used to produce a semi-effervescent, rosé to red wine. Lambrusco prevailed through a bad reputation developed in the 1970's where production was high and quality was poor. Fortunately, Lambrusco is now regarded as a higher quality wine but its prices have remained low. Lambrusco is known for being fruit-forward, dry to semi-sweet, and medium bodied.

official tasting notes

- Rinaldini Lambrusco Vecchio Moro
- 100% Lambrusco
- look: bright ruby color, 12% ABV, medium-bodied
- smell: blackberry and ripe plum
- taste: winy nectar, cream, smooth tannins
- retail value: $20

txakoli rosé

Txakoli is a unique wine style produced in the Basque region in Spain. Pronounced chok-oh-lee, most of the Txakoli is consumed from within the region, with little exported. The wine is known for a subtle effervescence and produced from the regional grapes of Hondurrabi Zuri and Hondurrabi Beltza. Txakoli wines are light, refreshing, and high in acidity.
